Title: Danish troops in the Williamite army in Ireland, 1689-91

Publisher: Four Courts Press

Abstract: About 15 per cent of the troops that fought on the Williamite side at the Battle of the Boyne were Danish. Well-organized and equipped with state of the art weapons – flintlock muskets, plug bayonets, grenade guns and chevaux-de-frises – they were a potent weapon in William III's armoury. This book looks at the Danish contingent in William's multi-national force fighting in Ireland in 1689–91. It examines how the Danish king, Christian V, essentially hired out a portion of his army due to the deplorable state of national finances, his desire to give his troops and officers some valuable combat experience, and his support of a fellow Protestant monarch. The book then follows the Danish troops through the course of their Irish campaign, and utilizes a wide variety of sources to illuminate the leading personalities and key events of the war as seen particularly from the Danish perspective.
